...Should She Choose Love?—Or the World's Applause?

She poured her soul, her tears, the fire of a great rage into that final encore of her first—and last—metropolitan concert.

New York's arbiters of art went forth to sing her praises to the world.

And the next minute she had flung herself into the arms of her smalltown sweetheart crying, "It's all over! I want to go home! Take me back home!"

Here Is Her Story:

"AS LONG AGO as I can remember, the low notes of the pipe organ in our little home church drew me as a moth is drawn to flame. When I was a tiny girl I used to run away from my playmates to sit entranced in a lonely pew, listening to the choir practising in the darkened church.

"And as I grew I dreamed two dreams: The first was of a little home, and an open hearth, and Will to care for me always; the other was of faraway cities, and great crowds, and a Prima Donna—always in white silk!—and thunderous applause!

"Sometimes all alone out in the meadows I used to sing until even the birds seemed to hush and listen. And before me thousands of heads nodded in approval—for the daisies and the dandelions were my audience.

"Later I sang in the church choir, and blushed as I realized that the hushed silence meant my voice was good.

"And still later I listened with burning ears while a great singer told me I could succeed. But she warned me that I would have to sacrifice all the real, homely joys of average people if I were to have a truly great career. 'You cannot have Love and Fame both. You must choose between them!' she said.

"I did not believe her then. Later, heartsick and alone in New York, I realized what she meant, and that my great decision lay before me. On the night of my great triumph—with her words ringing in my ears—I took the one really magnificent step of all my life...."
